| Practical-professional profile of the course and industry sector of reference | The course aims to offer interdisciplinary training designed to promote the aptitude to grapple with central themes of cultural debate while taking into account the implications on the legal level in parallel. In this perspective, the course entails the acquisition of skills inherent in the plan of communication, using images, and identifying privileged spaces and channels for disseminating information. In order to implement and reorient in relation to the stated purposes the wealth of knowledge possessed by the students holding different types of degrees, the course identifies particular thematic areas of exemplary application involving a historical approach and focus on issues of relevant cultural, social, and legal impact.

In particular, the course aims to train a profile identifiable as a Cultural, Social, and Legal Communication Consultant who can find employment in the field of marketing for public administrations (universities, ministries, local authorities), institutions, and enterprises in the cultural sector, private entities, the Third Sector, with a strong interest in women's empowerment, social, environmental and international sustainability, and social enterprise; cultural dissemination and communication in support of press offices of public institutions and private companies; community management, web content editing.

At the end of the course, learners will have acquired skills in managing content concerning the use of images, the identification of privileged spaces and channels for disseminating information in the directions envisaged by the example areas in the curriculum.

No internship activities are planned.
